1. Welcome to Survey 6 of the AMMA Workplace Relations Research Project

This is the sixth survey of the AMMA Workplace Relations Research Project, the aim of which is to track the impacts of the Fair Work Act on resource industry workplaces over time. This is a survey where you help us to help you. The answers will form an important part of AMMA's efforts to improve the operation of Australia's industrial relations system, particularly at this important time when the government is reviewing the operation of the Act and announcing legislative change.

We need as many respondents as possible to ensure the survey is representative of the entire industry. Please complete this survey whether or not you have completed these surveys in the past.

AMMA will use the information and comments you provide on a confidential basis to lobby the Federal Government and other political parties for necessary changes to the Fair Work Act. The results will also be valuable to you after they are reported by RMIT University as a way of comparing your experience with that of other employers in the resource industry. The more detail you provide the better, particularly in the comment fields which help enormously to paint a picture of what's happening at the enterprise level.

| Many of the questions government's response    | in this survey arise out of recommenations made by the Fair Work Act review panel (and the e to them) on which we would appreciate your further insights. |

| As with all AMMA survcompany or individual | reys, responses will be kept in the strictest confidence. No results will be attributed to any at any stage.  |

| 13. Adverse Action   |
|--|
| The Fair Work Act significantly broadened the anti-discrimination and freedom of association provisions contained in the Workplace Relations Act by introducing the 'General Protections'. Under the General Protections, an employer is prohibited from taking 'adverse action' against an employee because of an employee's 'workplace right'. |
| A workplace right can include: an entitlement to the benefit of an industrial instrument; the ability to initiate proceedings under a workplace law; or the ability to make a complaint or enquiry to seek compliance with a workplace law.  |
| Where the adverse action is alleged to have been taken for a prohibited reason, an applicant has 60 days to bring a claim if dismissal was involved (although this is set to be reduced to 21 days), or six years to bring a claim where dismissal is not involved.  |
| 60. Under the Fair Work Act, has your organisation received any adverse action /   |
| general protections claims from current, prospective or former employees or  |
| independent contractors? Tick all the groups you have received claims from.  |
